

WHAT DOES THERAPY AT BRAIN INTERCEPT LOOK LIKE?

The brain is an extremely complex organ. It can be affected by a multitude of varying symptoms and conditions and the result can lead to cognitive dysfunction. For some people minimal or mild changes in cognitive can create a sense of panic and worry. For others, they live with minimal, mild, or moderate symptoms and accept the changes, taking them in stride and adapting along the way.

At Brain Intercept we are here to tell you there is support and treatment for you regardless of if you are the person concerned with cognitive change or the one taking symptoms in stride.

COGNITIVE DECLINE INCLUDES:

Difficulty with Attention

- Lacking focus or distractibility
- Difficulty with multi-tasking

Difficulty with Memory

- Missing appointments
- Missing bills or late payments
- Asking repeated questions
- Misplacing items

Difficulty with Language

- Difficulty finding words or naming things
- Misspelling or making grammatical errors
- Requiring more effort to have fluent speech
- Difficulty with reading or writing

Visuospatial Impairment

- Difficulty locating items in plain sight
- Problems with recognizing items or faces
- Getting lost or problems with navigation

Executive Function Impairment

- Poor judgment
- Making poor decisions
- Difficulty with problem-solving
- Difficulty making plans or organizing
- Difficulty initiating tasks or ensuring quality performance

Psychiatric Impairment

- Apathy
- Anxiety
- Depression
- Agitation
- Poor impulse control
- Loss of empathy
- Hallucinations or delusions

We have Speech and Occupational Therapy at the clinic, to provide customized treatment for your specific area of concerns. Following an evaluation and identification of your specific areas of concern, we will help you with a treatment plan suited to your needs and wants. Integration of each client's support system including family, friends, or care providers is also an integral part of therapy at Brain Intercept. Living with cognitive change, regardless of the level of dysfunction, requires support and assistance from those closest to each client.

(605) 725-8885

405 8th Ave NW, Ste 203
Aberdeen, SD 57401

BrainIntercept.com